

The Money Pattern Checklist

Decide before you feel.

Isaac Newton could calculate the motion of the planets. He could not calculate his own FOMO. He sold, watched the price climb without him, bought back in near the top, and lost a fortune. His intelligence was never the problem. The order of events was.

Every rule below is a decision made now, while you are calm, so that it runs later, when you are not. Fill in the blanks. Put this somewhere you will see it before you spend, not after.

☐ 1 Wait seventy-two hours

Any purchase you did not plan, above a number you set today, waits three days. Write it down with the date you wanted it. If you still want it on day three, buy it without guilt. Most wants do not survive the wait.

My number: $ _____

☐ 2 Ask whether you want it, or want in

Before you buy anything that other people are excited about, answer one question in writing: would I want this if nobody else were buying it? If the honest answer is no, you are buying the crowd, not the thing.

☐ 3 Write the exit before the entry

Never put money into anything without deciding two numbers first: the gain where you walk away, and the loss you will accept. Newton had neither. He had a fortune, and then he had a lesson.

I sell at a gain of _____ or a loss of _____ ☐ 4 Separate the money you cannot lose

Money you need lives in a different account from money you are willing to risk. Not a line in your head. A different account, with a different login, that takes effort to raid.

☐ 5 Ban your own re-entry

If you sold and it kept climbing, you may not buy back in for thirty days. This is the precise move that broke Newton. What re-entry buys is relief from watching other people win. That is not an investment.

☐ 6 Automate the boring part

One transfer, on the day you are paid, before you see the balance. Any amount you can survive. Automation beats discipline because it never gets tired, jealous, or excited.

Transfer $_____ every payday _____

☐ 7 Five minutes, once a month

Same date every month. Write down everything you bought that you had not planned. You are not judging it. You are collecting the only evidence that will ever show you your own pattern.

My review date: the _____ of each month _____

The pattern was always there. Now you can see it.

Want to know which pattern is running in your money right now? The free Money Reset Score takes three minutes and tells you where the leak is, and which rule above matters most for you.

www.shekla.ai/assessment